

The public is not served when only one side of an issue is presented (especially when it is presented as "fact") without a balanced look at the opposite side. The airwaves are free, and should not be allowed to be hijacked for some partisan event that is essentially attempting to smother all but one viewpoint. Democracy doesn't work in a system where the highest bidder gets to squelch other views. This cynical ruse, being used by Sinclair, to hijack votes and increase the company's bottom line should not be allowed - and it is the responsibility of the FCC to maintain the integrity of the airwaves. Sinclair is a much greater concern to me than the exposure of a bimbo's breast on national TV. The FCC made such an issue on the "morality" of that event and how it could affect the unsuspecting public, so I would hope that the even greater moral and democratic issues at stake in this instance should be addresssed in an equally strong manner. If not, then the American public will be right to question the integrity of the FCC and it's ability to serve the people.
